📰 SECTION 0: DAILY MACRO & FINANCIAL NEWS DIGEST

1. Global Macro & Central Banks

- The Federal Reserve is currently expected to keep interest rates unchanged, despite strong US inflation data, and another hike is anticipated in December.
- The European Central Bank (ECB) is more data-dependent, with forecasts suggesting potential quarter-point rate increases in December and March, taking the deposit rate to 3% by March 2027. However, there are lingering concerns about France's budget crisis and its potential impact on the eurozone economy, which could temper the euro's appeal.
- The Bank of England (BoE) is poised for a potential rate hike in November, with derivatives markets pricing in a 93% chance, driven by hotter-than-expected UK CPI data for September (3.5% YoY, above 3.4% estimates).
- The US Dollar is trading with a soft undertone due to some aftereffects of AI-related concerns and stretched long positions being unwound, although it no longer appears particularly stretched on short-term valuation metrics. Geopolitical risks in the Middle East and rising energy prices are providing some support to the dollar as a safe-haven asset.

2. US & European Markets

- Wall Street pre-market activity shows mixed sentiment, with technology stocks generally gaining, but some broader risks remain unresolved.
- SpaceX (SPCX) delivered better-than-expected results, boosting AI stocks and driving significant pre-market gains (up over 10%). This has reinvigorated optimism in the AI trade, although tech volatility is expected to continue.
- Nvidia (NVDA) shares rose 2% in premarket trading following announcements at GTC Berlin, including a new modular AI data center design (DSX POD) that aims to significantly reduce deployment time and strategic partnerships to enhance AI data center efficiency.
- Tesla (TSLA) is up over 2% in pre-market trading, with investors reacting to news of potential merger talks with SpaceX and anticipating its Q3 2026 earnings report after the bell today. Key focus will be on automotive gross margin and capital expenditures for AI and Robotaxi initiatives.
- Other notable pre-market movers include SMCL, SMCX, and SPAX as top gainers, while TKNO, SMCZ, and POM are among the biggest decliners.
- European stocks and US index futures have experienced declines amid lingering doubts over the economics and financing of the AI data-center boom, as well as widening French bond spreads.

3. Indian Markets & Dalal Street

- (Note: Live pre-market news specific to Indian markets for today, October 21, 2026, was not available in the search results. General market themes like FII/DII flows and sectoral momentum are derived from typical market drivers.)
- Indian markets are likely to react to global cues, particularly the performance of US tech stocks and crude oil prices.
- FII/DII institutional flows will remain crucial for market direction, with recent trends indicating a cautious approach.
- Sectoral momentum may see continued interest in IT and AI-related sectors given global developments, while interest rate sensitive sectors could remain volatile.

4. Commodities & Crypto Wire

- WTI Crude Oil futures advanced by over 2% in the European session, trading around $99.80 per barrel, with Brent crude above $110. The rally is attributed to heightened Middle Eastern geopolitical risks, fading diplomatic resolution prospects between the US and Iran, and ongoing drawdowns in US commercial crude inventories.
- However, the momentum behind crude oil price gains appears to be waning, with technical indicators like RSI approaching overbought territory and cautious positioning among market participants suggesting building downside risk.
- Gold prices are trading slightly up around $4,132.42 per ounce. Geopolitical tensions and inflation concerns typically support gold as a safe-haven asset.
- Bitcoin is up almost 3% today, trading around $83,545. The broader crypto market may see volatility linked to risk appetite in traditional markets and any regulatory headlines, though specific major crypto regulatory/adoption news for today was not highlighted.
